a three-dimensional (3D) image display device for presenting an observer with a 3D image. 3D display devices are known in the art. One example of a known 3D display device is a stereoscopic type display device that uses glasses such as glasses with a polarizing filter and glasses with shutters. Such glasses for use in 3D display devices are cumbersome, and an eyeglass-free type display device that does not use such glasses has been developed. In the eyeglass-free type display device, for example, a 3D image is displayed on a display panel for presenting a 2D image. In the eyeglass-free type display device, a parallax is caused between the left and right eyes by, for example, a stereoscopic display method and thus, both eyes of the observer visually perceive a 3D image.
